Dear Mums, Dads and Carers

My thanks to all staff, students and volunteers for your hard work in supporting the many sport, arts and cultural activities happening in Term 1. It has been a hectic term and your extra effort has been appreciated.

Congratulations to the SRC for a superb disco last week. I am not surprised we have 211 students in our dance clubs. There are some brilliant dancers at our school.

Throughout the school year parents ask me the question, where should I send my child for high school? At the moment, this question is at the forefront of many Year 6 parents’ minds. I really want to have this conversation with you - What high school education can be for your child.

Once a student is enrolled in a high school, their parents will have an opinion about which high school is best. I recently purchased my wife a car, I am confident I chose the best car for Mrs Hackett, albeit, it might not be the best car for you. Similarly, the school that is best for your friend’s child may not be the right school for your son/daughter. Do your own research and pick what is best for your family, not what is best for other families.

We may not get the opportunity to speak face to face but perhaps I can provide you, a few things to think about when selecting a high school for your child:

- Teachers plan for making learning personalised, and experiential. How does that happen at your perspective high school?
- High school education should be integrated with and connected to real-world problems and issues to provide students opportunities to develop skills for life-long learning. What does that look like at your perspective high school?
- Middle school students need specialised support to get through those interesting years of Years 7 to 9. What specialised academic and welfare support is available to middle school students? Are teachers available for individual help before or after school? How does your school check if a student is on track socially, emotionally and academically?
- High school homework should be suitable for each student. If your child plans to go to university after high school, homework should include plenty of essays and reading analysis. If your child is an athlete or dancer, is it possible to maintain a heavy workload after school and weekends in sport or dance and complete the expected homework? Is there after-school homework support?
- Where your child is dedicated to a particular activity such as a sport, art or a subject, be sure to ask the question how your perspective high school can support your child’s chosen interest/career goal.
- Visit the school during school hours to get a feel for the school’s atmosphere.
- Observe the school during lunch and recess and get a sense for the students that attend the school.
Parent-teacher meetings are an excellent opportunity for parents to learn and share. Teachers spend time preparing to speak to you. It is worthwhile for you to spend a few minutes thinking about information you can share with your teacher. Remember, the intention of the meeting is to assist with your child’s learning.

Please be aware of the scheduled time of your meeting. Be punctual and don’t over stay your planned meeting time. There will be another parent waiting their turn to speak to the teacher.

A good question to ask teachers is how you can assist your child at home?
On Wednesday, March 25 the Tweed/Byron Life Action Group will hold a special ceremony at school to seek further corporate support for the Life Education van. We will host this event and our ambition is to raise $6000 for the Life Education van.

Life Education Australia is a not-for-profit organisation which has been established for over 35 years, and it began in this region. Through the use of the Mobile Learning Centre, and Healthy Harold, Life Education teaches children to respect their bodies, be healthy, active and make wise choices in life through drug and alcohol education.
